

Selling Is Project Management With Psychology On Top

Every complex deal is a structured project. The reps who internalize that outperform the reps still treating sales as a personality contest.

01

Scope the project

Map the buying committee, decision criteria, and timeline. SPIN questions, MEDDIC fields — this is requirements gathering with a quota attached.

02

Build the plan

Mutual close plan, owners on both sides, dependencies surfaced. Replace 'next steps' with a Gantt chart your champion can defend internally.

Manage the humans

- 01 Economic buyer wants proof of ROI
 - 02 Champion wants to look smart internally
 - 03 End user wants the work to feel easier
 - 04 Legal wants risk reduced to zero
 - 05 Each stakeholder gets a tailored asset

04

Drive to close

Weekly status updates, blockers escalated, signatures sequenced. The rep is the project manager — accountable for the date, not just the relationship.

Methodology is the project plan

Pick your acronym — SPIN, MEDDIC, Command of the Message. They're all the same instinct: run the deal like a project, and let psychology shape how you communicate inside it.
