QUESTION ONE

Can you define one clear outcome?

Not three. Not 'value delivered.' One outcome a buyer can point to and a system can count.

QUESTION TWO

Will customers agree with that definition?

Your version of 'resolved ticket' has to match theirs. If you're still negotiating the definition mid-deal, you're not ready.

QUESTION THREE

Is the value of that outcome the same across customers?

A resolved ticket worth $5 to one buyer and $500 to another breaks the model. Outcome pricing needs a tight value band.

THE VERDICT

Three yeses, you're a candidate. Anything less, stay on usage.

Outcome-based pricing isn't the future for everyone. It's the future for a narrow set of vertical AI companies who pass this gate.
